

LEXXUS and HTC: We Are Supporting Young Talent

Prague, 12 November 2015

Technology is our future, so it is very important to support young people's use of it and the deepening of their knowledge. A student at the Communications Technology Secondary Vocational School decided to show that mobile phones are not only for playing, but can also serve as a work tool.

A student in the fourth year at the Communications Technology Secondary Vocational School, Jan Hegar, got two industry leaders to participate in his project: LEXXUS, which sells properties and new buildings in Prague and the surrounding area, and HTC, a producer of mobile devices specialising in smartphones. The project's aim was to create professional videos for LEXXUS with the help of pocket technology, which is primarily for ordinary multimedia use. Because HTC and LEXXUS are companies that don't have a problem doing the impossible, the logical culmination was co-operation with the young talent, which would try to transform the idea into reality.

HTC loaned two devices for the project, an HTC One M8 and One M8sm. Both telephones excel thanks to their metal design, stereo BoomSound speakers, dual camera, high performance and FullHD display. The M8 also has an UltraPixel camera with an infrared port, through which it is possible to control home electronics. You will primarily appreciate this in households, where you can replace several remote controls with one telephone, which you will always have to hand. The television, home cinema and air conditioning can all be controlled using the telephone.

HTC

The HTC corporation's aim is to bring perfection into life. Since its establishment in 1997 the company has been among the leading innovators in smart mobile devices and virtual reality technology. HTC has accounted for a number of globally-appreciated products and technological firsts, including the iconic phone ranges HTC One and HTC Desire. The search for perfection is the centre of all the company's activities – from wonderful design and perfect processing, which inspires the whole industry, to unusual experiences using mobile technology.

LEXXUS Estate Agency
